In today's update:

- The Design of Plants now available
- Audio CD versus cassette tape
- Subscription to all new products now possible

-- The Design of Plants

Like everything else, animate or inanimate, a plant has a Design, a unique blueprint of its form.

In spring 1998 Ra lectured for a group of herbology students in Boulder, Colorado. He introduced the Design of plants and proposed timed germination to produce herbs with tailored healing characteristics.

The lecture is now available on audio CD from New Sun Services America.

-- Audio CD versus cassette tape

Our recent announcement of the monthly Neutrino Forecast now being available on CD confused some people. We should have said audio CD: those you put into a CD player and listen, not those you put into a computer.

During the last three years we have published 58 titles (a total of 90 tapes) on audio cassette. Even though the original material was recorded digitally, we hesitated to publish it on CD. Mainly, it was a question of volume: not enough titles were sold to merit the large production runs required for reasonable CD prices.

This has changed. Technology allows us today to produce small runs of CDs in-house.

The advantages of audio CDs are obvious: It is a robust medium (no tangled tapes), there's a CD player almost anywhere, it sounds much better than cassette and, best of all, the digital index lets users jump to predetermined tracks immediately, without winding tape. This is especially convenient for students of Human Design who want to listen to just a particular spot again, such as "the fourth Rave week in July," or "Neptune in line 2 of gate 36" (coming up).

Starting with The Design of Plants and the Neutrino Forecast, the available audio library will now expand only on CD.

We sympathize with our clients who listen to the tapes in their cars. We don't mind if you make a personal copy of your CD for your car, but, please, keep it for yourself. Even the new CDs are priced very reasonably at $15 a disc and everyone is encouraged to not make or accept copies.

-- Subscription to all new products now possible

Quite a few people have asked us over the years to have subscriptions of all new products New Sun Services America produces. So far we had to decline, but now it is possible. There's much in the pipeline, so if you'd like to subscribe to all upcoming new products, give us a call.
